

Stitcher Now on Android

Stitcher today announced the release of its streaming-audio app for Android mobile phones

San Francisco, November 30, 2009 – Stitcher, the leader in on-demand news and talk radio for mobile phones, is now available on Android's most popular devices. Instantly download the free app from the Android Market or at www.stitcher.com/dl onto the newly released Droid, the HTC myTouch 3G, the G1, the MILESTONE and any device running at least version 1.6 of the Android operating system.

Stitcher 1.0 is enabled to play in the background on Android phones, meaning users can access other apps while listening to news and talk radio on the go. Already a top app on the iPhone, Palm Pre and numerous BlackBerrys, Stitcher is now able to extend its reach to the diverse and rapidly expanding community of Android owners.

“Android users have been vocal in requesting Stitcher for their phones, so we're pleased to release the best on-demand talk-radio app to this exciting new platform,” said Stitcher CEO and co-founder Noah Shanok. “The app is blazing fast on Android devices, and we're exciting about the opportunities Android offers.”

The Stitcher app for the iPhone, BlackBerry, Android and Palm webOS allows users to enjoy leading digital content in an audio format, on the go – also known as Smart Radio. Stitcher's release onto Android's swiftly growing stable of devices marks yet another stride the company has taken toward making free Smart Radio available to the largest possible audience.
